What is Music?
Within the world community, the arts and humanities disciplines have traditionally exerted a major influence upon cultural and intellectual life. Participation in the arts and humanities is a significant factor in broadening a person’s vision and human awareness. Education in music is designed to develop a thorough, working knowledge of the field through courses in music history, literature and theory. Musicians extend this knowledge into areas of composition, performance, teaching, research, sales, publications, consultation and management.

The undergraduate program in music at Baruch College offers a major in music with or without a specialization in the Management of Musical Enterprises (which is the Music major combined with twelve credits in business, chosen from courses in economics, finance, management, marketing, law, etc.)

Occupational Opportunities
A music degree can lead to three types of positions:
1) professional positions
2) academic positions
3) commercial positions

Like all liberal arts majors, it provides a broad, flexible foundation for a variety of occupations or for graduate school.

Skills & Abilities
Music majors typically possess an innate creative ability or musical talent. Individuals who major in an artistic field typically prefer working by creating, innovating, and imagining. These are all areas that require the ability to concentrate, work with ideas and often work alone. Related major skills and characteristics are:

- Creative
- Ability to read, write and edit music
- Sing/instrumental talents
- Entertains
- Ability to keep audience’s interests
- Perseverance
- Communication skills
- Self-discipline
- Good stage presence
- Physical stamina
- Teaches
- Performance techniques
- Ability to use various sound equipment
- Adaptability and flexibility
Career Snapshot: Musician

Musicians play musical instruments as part of a group and/or solo. Musicians entertain live audiences in nightclubs, concert halls, and theaters featuring opera, musical theater, or dance. Although most of these entertainers play for live audiences, many perform exclusively for recording or production studios. Regardless of the setting, musicians spend considerable time practicing, alone and with their band, orchestra, or other musical ensemble.

Musicians often gain their reputation or professional standing in a particular kind of music or performance. However, those who learn several related instruments, such as the flute and clarinet, and who can perform equally well in several musical styles, have better employment opportunities. Instrumental musicians, for example, may play in a symphony orchestra, rock group, or jazz combo one night, appear in another ensemble the next, and work in a studio band the following day. Work schedules typically involve weekend and night hours. Musicians spend much of the rest of their time in rehearsals. Full-time musicians with long-term employment contracts enjoy steady work and less travel. Because many musicians find only part-time or intermittent work, experiencing unemployment between engagements, they often supplement their income with other types of jobs. The stress of constantly looking for work leads many musicians to accept permanent, full-time jobs in other occupations, while working only part time as musicians. Competition for jobs for musicians, singers, and related workers is expected to be keen. The vast number of persons with the desire to perform will exceed the number of openings.

Talent alone is no guarantee of success: many people start out to become musicians or singers, but leave the profession because they find the work difficult, the discipline demanding, and the long periods of intermittent unemployment unendurable.
