BUILDING BETTER: BOOSTING YOUR CONSTRUCTION PROJECT’S BOTTOM LINE

On November 13, a number of New York City’s most prominent and respected leaders in construction and development will gather at The Harvard Club to share their insights into building better and smarter, using their own innovative new projects as a backdrop.

New York, NY, November 8, 2013 – On November 13, The Steven L. Newman Real Estate Institute, Baruch College (CUNY) and Real Estate Weekly will co-host an interactive roundtable, Building Better: Boosting Your Construction Project’s Bottom Line. For this unique event, some of New York City’s pre-eminent builders, developers and other industry experts will gather at the Harvard Club to provide their in-depth insights on the most effective strategies for building successfully, intelligently and profitably in one of the world’s most complex and challenging real estate marketplaces.

The Building Better forum will explore hands-on strategies and solutions for controlling costs, reducing risks and managing projects effectively from the drawing board through completion and use. The panelists will provide a high-level, insider’s perspective on such issues as best practices, construction techniques, insurance and litigation risk, sustainability and resiliency.

“This event is all about doing things better, more efficiently and more intelligently—not only to increase revenues but to reduce risk, improve sustainability and resiliency, and make projects the absolute best that they can be throughout their lifespans—for those who own them, lease them, and live and work in them, ” notes Jack S. Nyman, Executive Director of the Newman Real Estate Institute of Baruch College. “In an era when project requirements are more complex than ever, we welcome the insights of some of our city’s most successful and well-respected real estate leaders.”
