

Departmental Honors (Honors Thesis)

HONORS THESIS GUIDELINES, from the Committee on Undergraduate Honors

Overview

The Senior Honors Thesis is, in most cases, a two-semester project completed under the supervision of a faculty mentor and is the culmination of your college experience, emphasizing critical thinking, writing, and independent work. Your thesis may or may not relate to your major. You are encouraged to select a topic that you find exciting and satisfying, and that will allow you to be creative. Most students write a thesis in their senior year, though it may be possible for upper juniors to enroll.

Why write a thesis

Completing an Honors Thesis is an opportunity to:

- Satisfy your intellectual curiosity
- Develop transferable skills
- Work closely with faculty mentors
- Open windows into future professions
- Be eligible to graduate with disciplinary honors on your diploma
- Serve as a capstone for BA majors (highly recommended)
- Help prepare you for an advanced (masters, doctoral, or professional) degree.

Thesis Eligibility

In order to pursue an honors thesis project, a student must have:

- 3.5 GPA in the discipline in which the thesis will be completed.
- 3.5 cumulative GPA.
- Approval of proposed thesis mentor, department honors coordinator/committee, and Chair of College Committee on Undergraduate Honors.

Next steps to write a thesis

- See the thesis application and guidelines. The proposal will include your objectives, research procedures, and a short bibliography of relevant work.
- Deadlines: The proposal must be submitted to the Chair of the College Committee on Undergraduate Honors committee by April 1st for a project starting in the fall semester or November 1st for a project starting in the spring semester.
- The prospectus must be approved by your mentor, department chair, and the Committee on Undergraduate Honors. The Committee on Undergraduate Honors reserves the privilege of recommending changes in the thesis proposal. Students must not commence work until the proposal has been given full approval.
