Belgian Students Visited Baruch College

On February 9, 2018, 40 students from Ghent University, along with three staff members, visited Baruch as part of their short-term study abroad program in New York City. Professor Myung-Soo Lee, Vice Provost for Global Initiatives, greeted and warmly welcomed the delegation and introduced Baruch College and The City University of New York. Professor Sofie Hondeghem of Ghent University headed the delegation.

The students had an excellent opportunity to participate in a demonstration on the Wasserman Trading Floor of the Subotnick Financial Services Center. Professor Jarrod Pickens curated the session. The special session lasted for almost two hours and inspired visiting students to learn more about the rules of financial transactions in Wall Street by engaging in simulated trading.

A campus tour was offered to them as a group before concluding their visit. Over the years, several students from Ghent University have joined the Baruch community as full-time students.
